

9:15 to 10:15 a.m. — Thursday, April 1, 2010

Fall should be a season, not an event

No matter the work activity or the time of year, falls from heights represent a significant source of injuries and deaths in the agricultural and green industries. Reducing accidents is important to containing health-care costs as well as improving the well-being of the members of these industries. Learn about the enforceable fall protection standards concerning working from heights. Attendees will learn to list the enforceable fall protection standards concerning working from heights; explain modern fall prevention techniques and equipment, applicable OSHA standards and recommended industry standards; and demonstrate new equipment. Presented by Timothy Butcher, OSHA program coordinator, The Ohio State University

Notes:

Action items: